The decision rests entirely with Caratus, and according to those who have reflected closely the deliberations, declarations and other activities of the Mexican delegates, Cerranza's decision rests entirely upon the question whether the agreement can be turned to the financial advantage of his government, whether acceptance by the bank ers of the United States of the security of the United States of the States of the States of the States of the United States of the States of the United States of the State

"Confiscatory" was the word used by the mining committee in describing these levice. They meant suspension of operation, they told Cabrera. Suspension of operation also was prevented for by another Carranza decree providing that idle plants shall be confiscated.

The Maxican Minister of Finance, after hearing the complaint, told the mining committee that the de factogovernment would be glad to reduce the tax were it not for the fact that the revolution-racked country needed every cent it could get. Its natural resources, he pointed out, were the country's chief asset, and that upon them fell the great burden of financing the government in abnormal times. He admitted that the rate of taxation was high, but declared it could not be helped.

The American commissioners, by making this stipulation the subject of a separate agreement, believe they have overcome this objection. But if they insist on its ratification before the troops are withdrawn, it is pointed out the effect is the same as if it were much part of the main protocol.

Mr. Pani's object in going to Mexico, it is believed here, is to advise Carranza that yesterday's agreement is the best Mexico can obtain from the commission, and to urge its acceptance so that the commission can proceed to more vital questions.

Plotters To Be Watched
One development of the conference regarded as significant of better relations between the two countries was a promise by the American Commissioner that those suspected of plotting against the Carranza de facto government in this country will be closely watched by the United States government and rigidly punished if it is found they are attempting to violate neutrality.

It became known to-night that this pledge, which was not put into writing, was given after the Mexican commissioners had complained that much of the difficulty along the border had been due to plots formed within the United States.

The American members made it clear, however, that claims of non-enforcement of neutrality laws in the United States would not be accepted as excusing violations of American rights at the border.
